that, there would be no sense in an attempt to make anything safe to eat for the middle classes," said Laurence H. Kupfer, a nutritionist on the staff of the Office of Consumer Affairs of the Federal Trade Commission.

"This is a food safety issue," he said.

An inspector general's report earlier this year said that the Food and Drug Administration had not been able to conduct an adequate study of the safety of the food supply because it did not have the resources to do so.

The agency made public a study by the same inspector general's office that showed that about 90% of the food in the United States was contaminated with bacteria and other harmful substances.

"We're not going to solve this problem," Kupfer said. "But we can do something about it."
